* Normal colour vision is needed for some jobs in this industry.

Here are just a few examples:

- If you are creative you can work in the graphic design and pre-press areas.
- If you like practical, hands-on work, you can learn a trade which makes a range of great looking products.
- If you like computers, you can work with the latest in printing technology.
- If you enjoy working with people you can work in customer service, sales or marketing jobs.
- If you are interested in business, you can learn how to run a printing business.

Printing is very satisfying and rewarding. If you like a challenge, choose a career in print. Printing is practical, useful and an important part of modern life.

Natasha Packham has always been mechanically-minded and trained as a mechanic before starting her Reel-fed Flexographic apprenticeship at AEP Filmpac in Christchurch. "I enjoy seeing the finished product. Getting the colours right and everything lined up is a challenge."

Nisi Iafeta celebrated finishing his Binding & Finishing apprenticeship at Tablet Colour Print (Dunedin) by winning the top printing industry award, Printing Apprentice of the Year. Nisi's greatest achievement has been "gaining knowledge, stage by stage, of how each machine is operated and seeing the final product in the client's hand."

Kuran Ireland completed his Sheet-fed apprenticeship at Otago Daily Times Print in Alexandra. His future ambitions include completing further training and moving into management roles within the printing industry. "I would say customer satisfaction and loyalty are the greatest rewards of this job."

Sarah Gorman's Graphic Communication apprenticeship will come in handy as she plans to "definitely" keep working within the printing industry. Sarah says "My goals include achieving the Diploma in Print Management, gaining experience in various print/design/pre-press studios within New Zealand and overseas and to one day pass on my knowledge to future apprentices."
